

SAID HE WOULD KILL COP

James Boyle Brandishing Carving Knife and at Stop of Steps.

ESCAPED BY JUMPING OFF PORCH

Man Who Had "Cussed" His Wife and Step-Daughter Lost His Nerve When Officer Earp Started Up Stairs With Gun.

After "cussing out" his wife and step-daughter and raising a rough house in general, James Boyle's a shipyard quartermaster, eluded arrest at the hands of Patrolman Earp by leaping from a second-story window of his home, 231 Forty-fourth street about 2:30 o'clock yesterday morning and up to a late hour last night he had not been apprehended. The man was wanted on a warrant charging him with being drunk and disorderly.

From all accounts Boyle came home in a drunken condition late Tuesday night and he proceeded to vent his feelings upon his wife and step-daughter. After enduring his actions for an hour or more, Mrs. Boyle, accompanied by her daughter, went in search for an officer to arrest the drunken man. They met officer Earp on Huntington avenue near the Fortieth street bridge and told their story. The officer took them to the home of Justice of the Peace Joseph Holzbach, where Mrs. Boyle swore out a warrant.

Armed with the warrant officer Earp went to the house to arrest Boyle, but when he entered the man was standing at the head of the stair case with a long carving knife in his hand declaring that he would kill the policeman if he came up the steps.

The patrolman drew his revolver and remarked that two could play the killing game and proceeded to mount the steps. When near the top Boyle lost his nerve and fled, running into the front room on the second floor and locking the door. The policeman followed and kicked the door in, but when he entered the room Boyle had made his escape through a window, leaping from the top of the front porch to an adjoining porch and then to the ground.

Officer Earp hurried from the house and searched the neighborhood for the man, but he was not to be found.

"Little Miss Flirt" Company Failed to Put in Appearance.

"Little Miss Flirt" failed to put in her appearance yesterday and consequently the Academy of Music was dark last night and Manager Booker was compelled to withdraw his invitation to the Richmond College and William and Mary College boys to occupy the boxes for the evening.

Mr. Booker was not notified until late in the afternoon that the company would not come. It seems that on account of some financial troubles in New York, the company has been forced to cancel or postpone all of its engagements.

OPEN FOR STREET CARS

Work on Twenty-Fifth Street Bridge Nearly Completed.

REPAIRS COST ABOUT $2,500

Appropriation Has Been Exceeded, But Committee Regarded Expenditure as Absolutely Necessary for Safety of Public.

Street car traffic over the Twenty-fifth street bridge, which has been closed several weeks for repairs, was resumed yesterday and the regular schedule of the lines is now in effect. Tomorrow the bridge will be closed again, but it is probable that the repairs will have been completed late tomorrow evening.

About $2,500 has been spent in repairing and strengthening the viaduct and it is now in better condition than it has been in years. About $500 in excess of the appropriation for steel and iron work has been spent, but the highways and sewers committee and Superintendent of Streets Harwood deemed this absolutely necessary in order to make the structure safe. The steel girders under the flooring were found to be in worse shape than any one suspected and the men who are doing the repair work declare it is wonderful that something did not give way before the bridge was closed.

The steel and iron work cost something over $1,400 and the new flooring and painting cost about $1,000. It is believed that the bridge is now stronger than it was when first completed.

Lascars Taken Away.

Captain J. E. Williams, Immigration Inspector for this port, yesterday took the twenty-three Lascars belonging to the crew of the German steamer Barenfels, to Cape Henry and put them aboard their vessel. The Barenfels left the Lascars here several weeks ago and went to New York. She is now bound from New York for Calcutta.

2 BRICK COURT.

Temple Chambers in Which Oliver Goldsmith Amused Himself.

Few buildings link the London of the present day with so many of the literary characters of the London of the past as does the house at 2 Brick court, Middle Temple. The dominant memory which clings around it is that perpetuated by a handsome tablet on its front elevation bearing the words:

In these chambers died Oliver Goldsmith On the 4th of April, 1774.

and a medallion of the poet.

Goldsmith's, however, was seldom a lonely figure, and he gathered around him at Brick court all the wit of the metropolis of his day. In 1765, on the strength of the success of "The Good Natured Man" and the fact that he was making some £500 a year, "Goldie" expended £400 on chambers "up two pair right" and fitted them with showy carpets, gilt mirrors and furniture extravagantly upholstered in blue velvet. Thus equipped, he embarked on a course of expenditure in which fine clothes for himself, grand dinners to a literary coterie and pretty trifles for venal beauties all bore costly parts. Johnson, Dr. Arne, Percy Reynolds, Francis and Bickerstaff were among the frequent visitors at 2 Brick court, but their arrival was not the cause of so much concern to Goldsmith's cotenants as that of some other of the poet's guests. It was the little supper parties to Goldsmith's young friends of both sexes that drew from the studious Blackstone, hard at work on his famous "Commentaries" in the rooms below "Goldie's," bitter protests against the racket of his "reveling neighbor."

Both "The Traveler" and "The Vicar of Wakefield" were published soon after Goldsmith moved into Brick court, but the income they brought him was insufficient to withstand the drain made on his resources by his extravagance, his generosity and his taste for gambling. Owing £2,000, unable to obtain further advances from his booksellers and seeing no way out of his embarrassments, Goldsmith broke down in spirits and health. He had to leave those windows from which he used to watch the rooks in the grove, which once stood where now is Elm court, and, as he wrote, "often amused myself with observing their plan of policy." Goldsmith returned thither, nevertheless, to die, and though he was carried to his last resting place through rows of weeping women the benches of the Temple appear to have valued him so little that the very place of his burial became forgotten. For that neglect the tablet came as tardy but welcome reparation.—London Tribune.

THEATRICAL.

Gans-Nelson Pictures. The Gans-Nelson Fight Pictures will be shown at the Academy matinee and evening today and twenty rounds show Gans completely out-fighting Nelson, but the latter is always coming for more.

The last six rounds are shown, and although the men are going much slower, Nelson is still the aggressor. After the exhibition Joe Humphreys manager of Terry McGovern, said: These pictures show two things. One is that Siler certainly saw the blow that ended the fight and the other is that the only way in which these men can settle the supremacy between them is to fight another battle. From the picture the final looks as fair as it does foul. Nelson is shown in a clinch trying to land on the stomach, and my point of view it does not look as if he intentionally fouls Gans, if he fouled him at all.
